Performer Management : What you can do and what you shouldn't do

DO:

Be honest ,gentle

Praise progress, not just results

Adapt your style for each model

Be available for emotional support

Don't:

Micromanage her every second

Guilt-trip her about performance

Force categories she doesn't like

Let issues build up in silence

Successfully following up with a performer as a studio owner means finding the right balance between motivation, accountability and personal support.

You are not just a manager – you're also a coach, marketer and sometimes a therapist. A good studio owner guides, not just give orders.

Thank you for your attention!
